Bird watching is not a very expensive hobby, at least in the beginning, where one has to invest in a pair of binoculars, a few bird books, a notebook and pencil. The most important aspect is that the bird watcher has to be an early riser; almost in competition with the rising sun as the birds get ready to leave their nests, when their calls peak.

Initially, one need not go too far to take an interest in birds. Even if you live in the heart of the city, you will see birds. A few fruit bearing trees or any tree near a water body would be a good location. Banyan and peepal trees that bear fruits and flowering silk cotton, flame –of-the-forests trees attract the maximum number of birds.

Once you have decided upon the location, walk around the place for a few days, observing the many varieties of birds there. In the beginning, it could be confusing. Some may even be disappointed in being able to identify only the myna, sparrow and pigeon. But nothing to feel dispirited. Over a period of time, by reading books and with the help of avid bird-watchers one can make progress.

Firstly, the size, colour and shape of the bird has to be noted down in a notebook and if possible, one should also make a rough sketch of the bird. The feet, beak and eyes also have to be checked. Then look for distinguishing features. A little bit of homework by checking these notes with the bird books would help in identifying the birds. The noisy tree pies, glossy backed black droogoes, easily identifiable golden yellow orioles, tail lifting magpies and tail wagging melodious bulbuls and
