Saru’s relations with her husband began to be tense because Manohar was not prepared to realize that his wife was a doctor also and she returned home exhausted. He expected her at home at the scheduled hour and to look after the home as a wife would. She found in her analysis of the situations, “It is because I am something more than his wife that he has become what he is. If I can go back to being nothing but his wife... and yet was I ever that?..... he may no longer resent me. And then”... Therefore she thought that it would be better if he left her alone, allowed her much needed respite. But the trouble was how she should say this to him. Should she discuss the situation with him or tell him firmly and emphatically?

She wanted to talk to her husband about the difficulties she was facing due to lack of support, a working wife required from her husband, but she could not speak of it due to a strange hesitation. On a particular day, she came home late due to an emergency which only she could deal with. She had asked Nirmala to ring up home to inform that she would be late, yet when she reached home she found her husband sitting with a brooding expression, not willing to talk to her. Willy-Nilly, she had to speak to express her repentance for no fault of hers. She readied herself quickly, covered Abhi, put away the book Renu had been reading, switched off the light and asked her maid to put the food on the table. Her husband joined only after she had served for both. He refused to answer when she asked whether children had eaten well.

Then it became clear to her that her husband had not taken all this in a good spirit. She had to say that she wanted to give up working. She mustered up courage to say, “Manu, I want stop working. I want to give it all up...my practice, the hospital, everything,” adding tht she was tired, not so much in body as in mind. Her husband knew well the consequences of her giving up practice, hospital at all. He asked, “can you bear to send the children to a third – rate school? To buy them the cheapest clothes, the cheapest of everything? To save and scrape, and still have nothing after the first few days of the month? No Saru, there can be no going back. We have to go on.” He presented realities of life but said nothing to assuage her injured psyche.

The cold light of a dying moon washed the garden. A vanished fragrance lingered in the air. As of old a formless dream hung over it all.

I, just I, on this shore of solitude.

I do not know where you are.

Once on a night like this when we had sat together in this garden I had thought of the unknown end to come and sighed.

You had asked me with concern, 'Why do you sigh in sadness?'

I had asked, 'When I sink into the darkness of dead memories, who will remember me?'

'I will!' you had said. 'My girl, thought of you will come to me with the silver light of the morning star, through the golden rays of the rising sun, borne on the fresh fragrance of spring. When I hear the clouds bursting into mighty peals of thunder, when I see the blinding flash of lightning, my soul will come running to you'.

That moment is long past.

Now remains only this living moment of time!

Between the two the vast ocean that is time undulates, wave upon wave. All hope is ended. The wings of thought have weakened. I am descending. Moment... by...moment. I am merging with the darkness of memories that are no more. And yet tender leaves sprout. Buds blossom. Spring comes in its freshness. A formless dream hangs over the garden bathed in moonlight. In the silence that fills the world my heart blossoms into thought.

‘My girl, why did you not come?’ I remember that precious moment when your call came joyously floating to my ears.

‘This night of a spring is coming to an end. This loneliness is burning me up. My girl, why have you not come yet?’

‘When the tender leaves move to the rhythm of your soft heartbeats;

When the soothing moonlight peeps out through your sweet smile;

When the breeze of the night caresses me with the cool fragrance of your tender body;

My girl, I hear the sound of your impatient footfalls. She’s coming! She’s coming! She’s coming! My princess so full of love is coming! My heart has known no rest. Why do you make it beat so fast?’

‘My girl, why have you not come?’

Mr. Jones was the owner of a manor farm. There were many animals in his farm. He was a drunkard and did not take proper care of animals. He used to beat his animals black and blue. One night when Mr. Jones was sleeping, he had a disturbance and fluttering in the farm. In the farm, Old Major, a boar sent a message to all the animals of the farm that they should meet the Major. In his message he said that he had a strange dream that very night. He wished to convey the contents of the dream to the other animals.

All the animals gathered at the big barn at midnight to listen to old Major. Among the animals, there were three dogs, Bluebell, Jessie and Pitcher, the two card horses, Boxer and Clover, a donkey Benjamin and the white mare, Molly. All the animals sat in a peculiar manner. The pig sat down in front of the platform on which the Old Major was lying. When all the animals sat down the Old Major cleared his throat and told the animals that his life was very short. Therefore, he wanted to convey an important message to them. He told the animals that the life of the animals was full of troubles. He disclosed the fact that man exploited the animals for his interest. All the miseries of the animals have become short. The Major was of the opinion that in England no animal was free. Animals were able to produce everything. But man enjoyed the fruits of their labour. When man found that certain animals were of no use, that animal was sent to the house of the butcher. Major said, “No animal escapes the cruel knife in the end.” According to him, all men were enemies and all animals were comrades. “Whatever goes upon two legs an enemy, whatever goes upon four legs or has wings is a friend.” In order to revolt against man, he declared that no animal should live in a house, or sleep in a bed, or wear clothes or drink alcohol or touch money. He also declared that no animal should kill other animals because all of them were equal. All the animals called Major a comrade.

At the end of the long speech, Major told the animals about his dream. He told them that it was a dream of that land where no animal was slave of man. At last he sang a song which he had sung in his childhood. The song was related to the freedom and glorious future of the animals. All the animals were impressed by the song. They called the song “Beasts of England”.

It was the beginning of November when we left Calcutta for Harsingpur. The place was new to me, but the scents and sounds of the countryside pressed round and embraced me. The morning breeze coming fresh from the newly ploughed land, the sweet and tender smell of the flowering mustard, the shepherd boy's flute sounding in the distance, even the creaking noise of the bullock-cart, as it groaned over the broken village road, filled my world with delight. The memory of my past life, with all its fragrance and sound, became a living present to me, and my blind eyes could not tell me I was wrong. I went back, and lived all over again my childhood. Only one thing was absent: my mother was not with me.

I could see my home with the large peepul trees growing along the edges of the village pool. I could picture in my mind's eye my old grandmother seated on the ground with her thin wisps of have untied, warming her back in the sun as she made the little round lentil balls to be dried and used for cooking. But somehow I could not recall the songs she used for cooking. But somehow I could not recall the songs she used to croon to herself in her weak and quavering voice. In the evening, whenever I heard the bellowing of cattle, I could almost watch the figure of my mother going round the sheds with a lighted lamp in her hand. The smell of the wet fodder and the pungent smoke of the straw fire would enter into my very heart. And in the distance I seemed to hear the clanging of the temple bell.

Section E: Reading Comprehension (1×5=5)

It has been rightly said that when a man is sitting behind a steering wheel, his car becomes the extension of his personality. There is no doubt that the motorcar often brings out a man's very worst qualities. People who are normally quiet and pleasant may become unrecognizable when they are behind a steering wheel. They swear, they are ill-mannered and aggressive, wilful as two-year olds and utterly selfish. All their hidden frustrations, disappointments and jealousies seem to be brought to the surface by the act of driving.

The surprising thing is that society smiles on the motorist and seems to condone his behaviour. Everything is done for his convenience. Cities are allowed to become almost uninhabitable because of heavy traffic; towns are made ugly by huge car parks; the countryside is spoilt by road networks, and the mass annual slaughter becomes nothing more than a statistic, to be conveniently forgotten. It is hightime a world code was created to reduce this senseless waste of human life. With regard to driving, the laws of some countries are notoriously lax and even the strictest are not strict enough. A code which was universally accepted could only have a beneficial effect on the accident rate here are a few examples of some of the things that might be done. The driver should be made to take a test every three years or so; the age at which young people are allowed to drive any vehicle should be raised to at least 21; all vehicles should be put through annual test for safety. Even the smallest amount of alcohol in the blood can impair a person's driving ability. Maximum and minimum speed limits should be imposed on all roads. Governments should lay down safety specifications for manufacturers, as has been done in the USA. All advertising stressing power and performance should be banned. These measures may sound harsh, but surely nothing should be considered as too severe if it results in reducing the annual toll of human life. After all, the world is for human beings, not for motor-cars.

1. What is the effect of alcohol on the driver?
2. Pick out two words that describe the attitude of the driver of a car.
3. List two things that are done for the convenience of motorists.
4. Why does the writer describe motorists as wilful as two-years olds'?
5. Give one example from the passage for what can be done to prevent accidents.
